Bamboo is better. What will we discover it can do next? Not only can it grow three or four feet in a single day, but bamboo is stronger than maple, has more compressive strength than concrete and the same strength-to-weight ratio as steel.

Bamboo is Better for the Planet

Replenished from an intricate network of roots, a stalk of bamboo grows to its maximum height of around 80 feet within just two months.

Although there are over a thousand species of bamboo, only Moso is perfect for manufacturing into our beautiful, durable products. Moso bamboo is cut and carried out of the forest on foot by family farmers. This gentle harvesting method sustains the grove's delicate root system for future growth.

Bamboo is Better for People

Our network of family-owned farms and specialized production facilities are all located near one another. The close proximity of where our bamboo is grown to where it is used helps build close relationships with lasting economic benefit for everyone involved. It also helps ensure our access to the highest quality raw bamboo.

Bamboo is Better for Products

Moso bamboo is ready for harvest in 4-5 years, and we use only the hardest part—the lowest 10 feet of each stalk. But nothing goes to waste! While the upper portion is passed on to others for use in lighter-duty products, we use the lower sections in four different ways: vertical grain, flat grain, end grain and "NewBoo."
